Ellis' idea that life is art, a dance, is appealing, particularly to those of us who already have an artistic bent, and it's a sentiment that most of us have had at one time or another. Ellis develops his metaphor by looking at some major institutions of life: religion, morality, the arts in general and writing in particular.

Now The Dance of Life reveals the ways in which individuals in culture are tied together by invisible threads of rhythm and yet isolated from each other by hidden walls of time. Hall shows how time is an organizer of activities, a synthesizer and integrator, and a special language that reveals how we really feel about each other.

We follow the "dance" as the embryo becomes a multilayered organism. There are also intriguing discussions of how a blastocyst's three types of cells arise and how they interact to make something as complex as the human body. The story has a memoirlike atmosphere, especially when Zernicka-Goetz turns to episodes of her life.
